Abstract: During the years of independence, Uzbekistan took important steps in the direction of social development, formation of civil society and involvement of young people in active life. As an integral part of this process, it is becoming increasingly important to focus on the field of volunteering. Volunteering plays an important role not only in solving social issues, but also in educating the younger generation and increasing their participation in social activities.

Volunteer activity is developing in Uzbekistan in many areas. Young people, students and socially active citizens are voluntarily participating in various projects. They are active in areas such as ecology, education, health care, culture and sports. Through volunteering, young people feel their social responsibility, get the opportunity to communicate with the public and learn new skills. Cooperation between state and non-state organizations is important in the development of volunteering in Uzbekistan. The help and support provided by the state serves to further develop volunteer activities. In particular, the Youth Affairs Agency, the Ministry of Social Development of the Republic of Uzbekistan and other organizations are implementing various programs and projects to encourage volunteering.[1]

Various trainings and seminars are held for young people as part of volunteer activities. Through these activities, young people learn the importance of volunteering, its role in social life and the opportunities it creates for themselves. Also, through volunteering, young people have the opportunity to develop their professional skills, participate in teamwork and improve their leadership skills. Young people working in the field of volunteering are helping to solve many social problems. They participate in projects such as providing social services in local communities, fighting for an ecologically clean environment, improving the quality of education, and helping in the health system. These activities are not only useful for society, but also help young people to engage in social life, demonstrate their abilities and develop their relationships. The role of the mass media in increasing the importance of volunteering is also great. It is important to inform the general public about volunteering through the mass media, to report on successful projects and to attract young people to volunteering. This process encourages young people to pay attention to social issues and not be indifferent to them.[3]

Volunteer work in Uzbekistan is recognized not only domestically, but also internationally. Uzbekistan's cooperation with international organizations, including projects with UN, UNESCO and other organizations, are implementing programs aimed at developing volunteer activities. These programs allow young people to actively participate in the international arena, to learn about the experiences of other countries and to share their own experiences. One of the important factors for the development of volunteer activities is also the use of social networks and modern technologies. Young people have the opportunity to demonstrate their activities, discuss new ideas and projects through social networks. This will help to expand volunteering activities and attract more young people. The development of volunteering in Uzbekistan continues. Many projects are being implemented in order to strengthen the cooperation between the youth, the public and the state, to encourage volunteer activities and to further expand them. This process is important in solving social issues, developing society and attracting young people to active life. At the same time, there are problems in the development of volunteer activities. In some cases, young people have difficulty getting involved in volunteering. It is important that they are interested in volunteering, willing to give their time and feel a sense of social responsibility. Therefore, it is necessary to effectively communicate with young people, encourage and support them in the development of volunteer activities.[4]

In Uzbekistan, it is necessary to implement a number of measures to focus on the field of volunteering, to involve young people in social activities and to increase their social responsibility. It is important to strengthen cooperation between educational institutions, public organizations and state bodies, to encourage volunteering and to implement programs aimed at developing young people's abilities in attracting young people to volunteer activities.[5]

Conclusion:

In conclusion, in Uzbekistan, paying attention to the field of volunteering, involving young people in social activities and increasing their social responsibility is important for the development of society. This process creates new opportunities for young people, helps to solve social problems and plays an important role in the formation of civil society. It is the duty of each of us to pay attention to the field of volunteering for the future of Uzbekistan.
