The attention given to women in society is directly related to the direction of our collective future. From addressing Gender disparities to developing inclusive growth, our prioritization of women's needs today has a profound impact on the fabric of tomorrow's world. This article delves into the complex relationship between attention to women, the dynamics of society, and a plan for a Shared Future.

Numerous studies have highlighted the multifaceted benefits of women's empowerment in various fields. Research shows that investments in women's education and health care not only increase personal well-being, but also provide significant social dividends. In addition, the different perspectives and leadership styles carried out by women contribute to more effective decision-making processes, leading to innovation and progress. However, despite the many arguments that emphasize the importance of women's attention, systemic barriers remain, hindering their full involvement and contribution to society.

In this study, a comprehensive literature review was conducted to gather insight into the relationship between women's attention, Social Development, and Future Perspectives. With appropriate keywords, various databases were searched and peer-reviewed articles, reports and scientific work analyzed to understand the current state of knowledge on the subject.

To honor women, to glorify them, to honor them, to honor them, to make them light, is the sacred work left by our ancestors. "It is known that the Holy Quran is one of the largest suras of Karim - "Niso", i.e. "women". Alloh Taolo in this Surah calls on people to treat women fairly, and this Divine Word Zamiri certainly embodies teran wisdom, " the head of our state Shavkat Mirziyoyev noted in his speech at the solemn ceremony dedicated to International Women's day [2].

Today in our society, the state glorification of women, mothers, women is recognized by the world for the work carried out to protect the social, economic, legal and spiritual interests of them. When we focus on the changes and processes taking place in Jahan in this regard. It is known that today, various problems are reflected in the global miqiyos: AIDS, drugs, organized crime, Interstate political, economic discord, ethnomultural, religious conflicts, civil wars, etc. At the same time, there is an increase in the penetration of women into "small" and "big" politics. Because women, as mothers, are worthy to put an end to all the negative events and processes taking place in the world in order to keep their children happy and protected.

The issue was also highlighted in the speech of President of the Republic of Uzbekistan Shavkat Mirziyoyev at the 75th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations. The head of state said, "We believe that gender equality policy has become a priority issue. The role of women in public administration is growing. In our new Parliament, the number of women deputies doubled," the minister said.

Indeed, for Uzbekistan, this area has risen to the level of Public Policy. On this basis, in recent years in our country, important steps have been taken to increase the social political activity of women, to expand their participation in public administration. For a short time, normative legal acts were adopted aimed at the comprehensive provision of the rights and interests of women.

Focusing on women is crucial to social progress and the future. Women make up half of the world's population, so any effort to expand and integrate their capabilities has a huge impact on society as a whole. Here's why:

Economic growth: expanding women's economic opportunities leads to productivity and economic growth. When women have access to education, employment, and entrepreneurial opportunities, it not only improves their lives but also contributes to the overall well-being of communities and nations.

Social stability: Gender equality promotes social stability and solidarity. When women are allowed to participate fully in decision-making processes, it leads to a better representation of more inclusive policies and different perspectives, reducing social conflicts and conflicts.

Health and well-being: investing in women's health and well-being benefits families and communities as a whole. Women often play a central role in promoting care and health in households, so their use of health services and information is crucial to the overall health of the community.

Innovation and creativity: different perspectives drive innovation and creativity. By ensuring that women have equal opportunities to participate in fields such as science, technology, engineering, and Mathematics (STEM), society can enter a wider pool of talents and develop innovations that solve broader problems.

Environmental sustainability: environmental degradation and climate change often disproportionately affect women. Giving women the opportunity to make environmental decisions and participate in sustainable development efforts is essential to effectively address these challenges and ensure a sustainable future for all.

In fact, focusing on women is not only about achieving gender equality; it is about creating a more equitable, prosperous and sustainable world for everyone.

The findings highlight the need for urgent efforts to overcome systemic barriers that limit women's access to resources, opportunities, and decision-making spaces. Expanding women's empowerment through education, health care, economic opportunities, and legal reform is crucial to building more sustainable, equitable, and prosperous societies. In addition, the development of a culture of inclusiveness and diversity is essential to attract women's collective talents and contributions to the formation of a bright future for everyone.

Conclusions and suggestions:

In conclusion, the attention given to women in society is not only a matter of justice or justice, but also a strategic necessity for Sustainable Development and progress. By prioritizing women's rights, addressing gender-based inequalities and encouraging their active participation in all areas of life, we can open up unused potential and develop innovation and create a more inclusive and resilient world. Policymakers, civil society organizations, businesses, and individuals must collaborate to implement policies and initiatives that promote gender equality and expand women's empowerment. Only through collective action and a firm commitment can we realize the promise of a future in which women's attention is not only recognized, but also celebrated as a catalyst for positive change.
